And then there were 8...

8 intrepid hashers circled up in West Park at the usual time on a very dark winter's night. The thermometer read a balmy -10, but it was very damp and cold so we all blamed Humidities. I thought for an instance we'd have lots of people, but Wet Spot bugged off after dropping off Cum Honour, the car that I thought contained long lost hashers Flying Low and Nail Me left, and we discovered it wasn't really Broken Boner's truck after flashing the driver.

Don't Know Dick called Circle Up, introductions were brief, running Hare, Slippery When Wet demonstrated trail with red brown flour ("it's way easier to see when you're actually out there"- lol) and told us how dark it was and that you really really need a light to find trail(yikes!) and we were off.

Walking Hare Curb Crawler had us (Doggy Style, DNK and myself) short cutting thru the parking lot and then navigating a steep hill that fortunately kept us out of the wind. I was starting to think we were on a geo-caching course with the frequency that Curb pulled out the map that Slippery had given him.

We saw no-one for a long time, then were startled by some homeless guy running up from behind us, but it turned out to be the very lonely and lost Chips a Whore. He vanished into the dark, checking every street and alley for flour, and we all commented that we would probably never see him again. But a few more blocks on, following flour directly across the road from where Chips was lost, we saw the other 3 runners, Humidities, Cum Honour and Slippery. We told them that we were very concerned for Chips and Titties yelled "that's too bad" and kept on running. Apparently we were on a treasure hunt and it was every man for himself!

After multiple stops and map consultations, we worked our way across to the wooded paths, where we hit the jackpot and found flour every 10 feet for at least 100 feet. At a check, Curb directed the walkers up a steep ravine side and Doggy did his best to convince the runners that we were on trail, but they wouldn't bite, preferring to stay on the path and take the easy way.

Once we got on the other side of the trees, we immediately recognized it as Crash's hill, where Crash Test Rummy once did a spectacular tumble and roll all the way down the snow covered hill. At the time I thought it was a spectacular fall, but have come to realize that it was just a typical Crash fall, after witnessing several others just like it (not sure if he's made of Teflon or rubber but is apparently indestructible except for the bloody scratches).

The runners appeared and were directed by Slippery to the Beer Near sign. She then directed us around one building and then another and another and another, looking for her lost vehicle. Finally she found it, almost beside the Beer Near sign, and provided us with an excellent Hash Hold with no licorice but almost everything else.

Back at Circle Up, the hares were rewarded with really cold beer, Doggy was rewarded for sporting a new look (no plaid, a form-fitting winter coat, and a cone head that proved his balls really are on top of his head, and Slippery rewarded DNK, Doggy and Cum See for offering too late to assist her as walking hare. The OnOn was held at OJ's, where we again shared great food and lots of laughs.
